Chapter 1 by KelseyDoes GirlGaming

Everything today was fine and dandy, until my clock stopped. No I don't mean the ones on the wall, I mean the grey metal watch fused to my skin. Your lucky if you have it, some people are just incompatible. It's strapped onto your wrist eternally, or until 'Certain Circumstances' were met. Certain Circumstances being you meet the one who makes your world go round.

Your true love, your other half, your soulmate, or the scientific term, your soul companion.

You know why girls are so emotional? They feel too much. They have an 'extra' piece of a soul that has a home out there, and it longs to be reunited with that home. Once, before they were born, the girl's soul and her soul companions were once one whole. Now there just two halves separated. It's also the reason boys are so daredevilish, taking risk after risk, trying to fill the hole in their heart, or well, their soul. Sometimes it's different, and a boy has an extra piece, or a girl is missing hers. It's not a problem, they just won't find their love in the opposite gender.

But then, there are the unlucky ones. The ones where their watch just doesn't work. The ones whose watches fall to the floor after they've been born. They are missing a piece, and it can't be filled. It really can't be helped though. Some people are born without their soul companion.

To remove the watch, you have to meet your soul mate.

That is the preferable way it is removed. Sure there is another condition, but that's in extreme cases. And I do mean extreme. Like catastrophe worthy. Because you've been waiting your whole life to meet your soul mate, and then... Well, to put it simply, cases like mine.

Extreme, because my timer just stopped. They don't just stop. Not without two reasons. You've met your soulmate early or...

Extreme, because it said I had only three more days. Three more days before I met the one who
